

About the Agency

Participants Can Get a Tax Break

Most Family Independence clients who are working qualify for a special tax benefit called an earned income credit. This can be in the form of a lump sum refund when income taxes are filed or an advance which lets the client get a small tax refund in each paycheck.

If You Want to Move to Get a Job

DSS may be able to help FI clients move if they cannot find a job where they now live because of plant closings, lack of entry level jobs or high unemployment.

Employers Get Breaks Too

Employers gain when they hire FI clients. They get good, eager employees who are willing to work. In addition, DSS offers special programs to employers.

Work Experience is a program designed to provide workplace training opportunities for FI recipients while also providing employers a chance to observe prospective employees at no cost.

On-the-Job Training is a program offered through the local Work Force Development boards and reimburses employers up to 50 percent of a qualified employee's pay for up to 499 hours.

Cost-saving state and federal tax credits are available to employers who hire eligible FI recipients.

What it's all about.

About the Agency About the Agency About the Agency About the Agency

The South Carolina Department of Social Services is committed to helping people build better lives. Because of the changes in the welfare laws, DSS has become an agency that focuses on employment and training for its clients while maintaining its commitment to ensuring the well-being of the children and families it serves.

About the Law

The South Carolina Family Independence (FI) Act of 1995 and the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1996 are the two laws that govern the way DSS now operates in South Carolina.

How It Works

Here's what happens when someone applies for welfare:

The client and his or her DSS case manager develop and agree on a Family Plan for the client to follow. The plan outlines the steps the client and DSS must take to help the client become independent, while maintaining a safe and nurturing environment for the children and their family. The client receives an FI stipend but must agree to participate in activities such as assessment, job search, Job Club, family management skills and other training.

These activities are designed to identify and build upon the employment-related strengths and abilities of each client, so that clients can improve their chances of getting and keeping a good job. FI clients may also participate in educational and vocational training activities when necessary and appropriate.

The South Carolina Department of Social Services provides job development and placement services.

DSS Helps in Other Ways

DSS offers child care and transportation assistance to participants who are involved with the FI Work Program. DSS may also pay support services such as child care and transportation for a short time for clients who go to work and leave the FI (welfare) roles.

Don't Forget Child Support

People who apply for FI benefits must give specific information about the absent parent of their children in order to help DSS collect child support. Identifying the absent parent and then locating that parent are two of the steps in that process. DSS will make every effort to collect child support for the children of clients participating in FI.

Programs for Young People

DSS offers a program designed specifically for young people involved in FI. The Young Parent Program helps youth who have already had babies to complete their own adolescent development while learning good parenting skills. This program also provides prevention information so that participants might avoid additional pregnancies.
